

ABSTRACT

A device for providing multi-directional movement comprising a housing having at least one roller located at least partially within the housing, at least one bearing 5 means for supporting a load and configured to couple the at least one roller with the housing whereby at least one roller is able to rotate relative to the housing and a braking means for providing resistance to rotation of the at least one roller.